

Training Led by Gareth D Morewood

Autism, Education & Emotional Regulation

A Unique One Day Course for Educators 17/9/2020

This training package draws upon the acclaimed Saturation Model (Morewood et al, 2011) developed by the lead trainer as part of a whole-school approach to supporting autistic students in mainstream schools, fused with emotional regulation and low arousal approaches developed by Studio III (McDonnell & Deveau, 2018).

As a new training package which draws on the clinical expertise of Professor Andy McDonnell and the practical whole-school systems established and evaluated by Gareth D Morewood, 2019 will see this unique training offered for the first time to schools in the UK and abroad.

You can expect to;

- receive a strong evidence-informed training day.
- consider the challenges young people face in educational settings and in their community.
- get clear strategies that are proven to have a significant impact upon learning, engagement and with the reduction of behaviours of concern.

The day will focus on;

- individual students' areas of need.
- classroom pedagogy.
- whole-school approaches as identified in the research undertaken by the lead trainer along with the development of an understanding of stress, emotional regulation and arousal

This is a unique opportunity to collaborate with other colleagues and to work with a highly regarded expert. We hope that you would like to be part of the conversation.

During 2019/20 The University of Cambridge Primary School in collaboration with The Chartered College of Teaching and UCL, Centre of Inclusive Education will provide affordable training opportunities to promote inclusive SEND practices and improve SEND knowledge. The aim is to, improve confidence and competence when teaching children with additional needs. School budgets are tight or virtually non-existent for professional development. The proportion of children with SEND attending mainstream settings is rising. It's essential that schools need to think and act more inclusively. A change is needed: every school should be a 'special' school to all those who attend.
